Quilting and Coding

Mr. Brennan's freshman English classes recently read an article about Quilt Square Codes. During 1800-1865, hanging quilts along the Underground Railroad helped escaping slaves in their journey to freedom. The quilts contained secret codes that would provide vital information for the slaves. Two students actually made quilt squares for a project! Tierney Baldwin made the first quilt square in the "Bow Tie" pattern. This code meant that slaves should wear their best clothes for that section of their journey. Denver Beland made the second quilt square in the "Log Cabin" pattern. This code meant that the house was a safe place for escaping slaves to stay for the night.
